

“We don't have the luxury of thinking ... Some people make all the decisions for us”

My reflections

This quote perfectly describes the situation most people have always been in. This applies not only to prisoners and slaves, but also to "free people". I know, it is hard to understand, but it is true. From an early age, we learn that we have freedom, and we can do whatever we want. However, we are not aware of all the obstacles that keep us from being ourselves. We always think, "What are people going to say?" and that's wrong. Because of this belief, we listen to other people telling us what to do without even knowing them. We were born with this flaw and few people will be able to consciously decide about themselves in the future. From my point of view, people shouldn't hide their true self from others. We should be who we really are.

Everyone has faults and that makes us human.
